

ENCHANTMENT

Dance with me, oh child of God
For love has left me and enchantment took it's place.
Spin me not but look upon mine face
For love has danced with me, yet love forgot
Love looked upon the rose as beauty full of innocence
Yet love forgets me. I too don't know
What the wind has whispered
I wish to know, but love forgets me now
Only love knows how,
Or why,
Or when,
Or best

I feel the wind, yet I know not what it says.
I cling to life
I fear, I cling no more.
I slip upon the thorn and life slips away from me
I look upon a mirror with no reflective face
For love has left me and enchantment took it's place.

Yet, once upon a time, in the land of dreams
All fell still
The earth made way and gaped with longing love
The crust of life broke free
The rose was me and I was you and we were one
I could only, just be.
Once upon a time In a land
Where the minute stop and the blind can see

The wind whispered and I heard
Enchantment left and love immersed, within the rest
And the rose was swallowed and Destiny fulfilled,
My simple, enchanted quest.
For love.
